Americans Against Language Barriers (AALB)

Americans Against Language Barriers (AALB) is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization dedicated to improving access to essential services for individuals with language barriers, particularly in healthcare. Each year, AALB trains hundreds of medical interpreters and partners with free clinics and charitable organizations nationwide to connect them with professional volunteer interpreters.

AALB's award-winning training programs serve as prerequisites for national certification in medical interpreting. Since 2018, AALB has trained over 3,000 medical interpreters and received the IMIA Distinction in Education Award.

Advancing Linguistic Equity in Healthcare

The United States is home to a vast array of linguistic diversity, which both enriches our society and presents unique challenges. Millions of individuals encounter language barriers when seeking essential services, particularly in healthcare. These barriers can lead to a higher risk of receiving substandard care and experiencing potential harm.

By convening experts, stakeholders, and advocates, we seek to develop strategies and share best practices to overcome these challenges, ensuring that all patients, regardless of their language, receive equitable and high-quality healthcare.
